DELAY IN OPENING CHUNGKING

It will amuse many and disgust some to hear that, according to our latest advices. Chungking $25,185.20 is not yet opened. The Customs staff, a considerable number of foreigners and Chinese, with all their private and official impediments, are $25,417.75 still living in junks on the river in the greatest discomfort; the British Consul is more comfortable in the house in the city that has been occapled for some years by the wandering representatives of the Queen in the west of China. and is meanwhile negotiating for a site on which to build a consulate; and the merchants of the future are to live wherever they can, as it is not, at present at any rate, intended to ask for a concession. Our Chungking correspondent, in his letter of the 8th ultimo, explained that the Customs staff could not have, as they had expected, the use of the vamen provided for the temporary residence of passing officials, because the Tactal was just going out of office. Moji is just in a position to tap the whole E the above-mentioned tract of coun try. It lies right under the flank of a steepisl range of rugged heights that begin with Adachi-yama and Miyoken-san immediately above Kokura, and terminate in the scraggy scar whose buse is being slowly but surely eaten away On the top of this scarp is one of the six formidable butteries which in future will make this passage a wonderfully difficult one for hosfile ressels to negotiate. It looks down upon the Nagato hills with the long whitewalled street of Bakan running ribbou-like along their base, upon Dannours, the spot where the Minamoto crushed the power of the Tairs for ever 700 years ago, and upon the scene of what we cumhemistically term the "Shimonoseki offair" of 64 Off Bakan the tide speeds. along at a stiffish six or seven knots an bour; over at Moji, about a mile distant, the waters are as quiet and calm as a mill-poud. These fees, though not ordered by law, are customery and universally recognised. but the new graduate sheltered himself behind the legal flaw and defied the proctor to enforce payment. The latter vowed vengeance, searched through the successful essays and discovered that in the entrance form the name of the influential uncle had been substituted for that of the candidate's own father. This would, in Chinese. involve the change of a single character. The object of a change was obvious, and the proctor hastened to inform the Literary Chancellor, who at once took aways the young man's degree. The clan then bestirred themselves; the proofer was attacked, his chair smashed, himself beaten and allowed to escape by the skin of his teeth. The Chancellor was to have hift by dawn, but his house was besieged, and he was informed that he could not be allowed to come out unless he deprived the proctor of his office. After delaying till midday, he consented and brooking the insult as best he could degraded the proctor. Then and not till then he was allowed to depart. Can we have better evidence of the helplessmess of even high-placed mandarins at such a crisis?. Who knows whether a matter such athis attracts further notice and entails punish ment? And what guarantee is there that the panishment required for the previous violence to the foreign missionaries will finally fall upon the right head?

Is it right that rules here, or is it might, or even that more mighty than might in China face? The mandarine were afraid to accept the generous offer of the missionaries to forgive and forget, provided a proclamation were issued stating the fact, and censuring the real culprit -because it would take away his face; his face being gone, his friends would resent it, there would be further brawling, and the mandarins would lose not only face, but office.

True moral courage is needed surely. There is such a thing as, for the sake of right, being willing to lose face altogether, turning both right and left cheek to the smiter, but what government has the right to put its officials in such a position that loss of place and income is the price paid for such courage?-Daily News correspondent.
